

CAPTURED Clinical Trial

Our GP practice is taking part in a study called CAPTURED. The study will look at how well programmes that are designed to improve the quality of care for patients are working.

Each programme will use computer software which has a set of rules checked by doctors and clinical experts to find patients who may have conditions that are rare or difficult to diagnose. These patients will then be offered testing to see if they definitely do or don't have the condition. Finding patients with rare conditions earlier means patients can get the treatment or care they need.

Anonymised information or data about our patients will be shared with the CAPTURED study team to answer the research questions. Patients cannot be identified from anonymised data. No personal details will be shared with the CAPTURED study team.

If you do not want your data to be used for the CAPTURED study, you can opt out by speaking to the practice team. This will not affect any care you receive.
